

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Canadian Confederation

The _____ of Canada as a nation is a fascinating story of unity and political diplomacy. It began in the mid-19th century when the _____ of British North America sought greater self-governance. Leading the charge were _____, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, each with its unique concerns and aspirations. In 1864, representatives from these provinces gathered for the _____ Conference, initially intended to discuss the union of Maritime provinces. However, the discussion quickly shifted towards a larger _____ of all British North American provinces. This idea was further discussed at the _____ Conference, where the 72 Resolutions, a blueprint for the new nation, were drafted. These resolutions formed the basis of the _____ Act, 1867, which officially marked the birth of the _____ of Canada on July 1, 1867. The Confederation was not merely a political arrangement; it was a bold step towards creating a unified and independent _____. Over the years, more provinces and territories joined, shaping the Canada we know today. The Canadian Confederation is celebrated annually on _____, known as Canada Day, commemorating this monumental step in Canadian history.

Quebec

federation

July 1st

Constitution

provinces

Ontario

Dominion

Charlottetown

formation

nation