

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Celtic Art and Medieval Ireland

In the Early Medieval period, _____ was known for its distinctive art style, which we now call Celtic art. This style is famous for its intricate patterns, spirals, and _____. Artists would often create beautiful manuscripts, metalwork, and stone _____ that have survived to this day. One of the most famous examples is the _____ of Kells, a gorgeously illuminated manuscript containing the four Gospels of the New _____. It is a masterpiece of calligraphy and represents the peak of Celtic art. The use of _____ motifs is another hallmark, with birds and dogs often intertwined in the complex _____. This art was not only about beauty; it also had a deep _____ meaning, representing the intertwined nature of life. The colors used were vibrant, with reds, blues, and _____ standing out against the vellum pages. Celtic crosses, found throughout Ireland, showcase this art in _____, with each cross telling a story through its carvings. The craftsmen of the time were highly skilled, and their _____ was in demand across Europe. Their ability to weave spiritual and earthly themes into their _____ has left a lasting legacy. This art form was so influential that it helped to define the _____ of Early Medieval Ireland, making it distinct from the rest of Europe. The _____ of these artworks offers us a glimpse into a time where art and _____ were deeply intertwined, highlighting the creativity and skill of the Celtic _____.

symbolic survival Testament carvings stone art work designs golds animal people Ireland spirituality identity knotwork Book