

name: class: date:

Clay Types

Clay is an essential material in the world of _____. It comes from the earth and is made up of minerals, organic materials, and water. Different types of clay are used for various _____ projects, each with unique characteristics. The most common type is _____, which is often used for decorative pieces. This clay is fired at lower _____, making it slightly porous and not as strong as other types. Another popular type is _____. It is known for its durability and is often used for everyday items like dishes and mugs. Stoneware is fired at higher temperatures, making it stronger and _____. The third major type is _____, famous for its fine quality and delicate appearance. Porcelain clay is high in _____, giving it a smooth texture and a white color. This type is fired at very high temperatures, resulting in a glass-like and _____ quality. Another less common type is _____ clay, known for its high plasticity and strength after firing. It's often used in combination with other clays to improve their _____. Each type of clay has its own _____ range, which affects the final product's durability and appearance. Understanding these differences is crucial for _____ and hobbyists alike. They can choose the right clay for their project, whether it's for a simple mug or a complex sculpture. In the world of ceramics, the choice of clay can make a significant difference in the _____ of a piece.

workability	outcome	ceramics	pottery	waterproof	stoneware	ball
porcelain	earthenware	translucent	firing	artists	temperatures	kaolin