

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Colonial America Through an Artist's Eyes

In Colonial America, art was a _____ into everyday life. Artists often depicted scenes of _____ gathered in their homes. These homes, usually made of _____, showed the simplicity of colonial architecture. Paintings also highlighted the importance of _____, with vast fields and farmers at work. The clothing in these artworks was _____, reflecting the values of the time. Many paintings included _____, like horses and cows, which were essential for daily life. The _____ used were often soft and natural, mirroring the environment. Some artists chose to capture the bustling _____ where people traded goods. In these markets, one could see a variety of _____ from the colonies and beyond. Children, often portrayed playing or helping their parents, wore _____ similar to the adults. The _____ in these paintings showed a range of emotions, from joy to hardship. These artworks provide a unique glimpse into the life of _____ during this era.

window

colonists

modest

animals

wood

products

markets

colors

families

faces

agriculture

clothes