

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Divine Love in Middle Ages Prose

In the 14th century, a remarkable woman named _____ of Norwich wrote a significant work titled "Revelations of Divine Love." This _____ is considered the first book written by a woman in English. Julian became an _____, a kind of religious recluse, after experiencing a series of mystical visions. These _____ occurred in 1373 when Julian was seriously ill. In her book, she describes the visions she had of Jesus _____ and the deep understanding of God's love they imparted.

Julian's writing is characterized by its _____ on God's love and compassion. She is famous for her optimistic theology, notably the _____, "All shall be well, and all shall be well, and all manner of thing shall be _____." This message of hope and assurance was unusual in the religious writings of her time, which often focused on sin and _____.

"Revelations of Divine Love" is an important part of medieval _____ prose. It not only provides insight into Julian's thoughts and beliefs but also reflects broader _____ and beliefs of the Middle Ages. The book discusses ideas like the problem of evil and the nature of _____, showcasing a theology that is both deep and accessible.

Julian's work was not widely known during her lifetime. It became more recognized in the _____, gaining attention for its theological depth and its position in English literary _____. Today, Julian of Norwich is celebrated for her contributions to Christian _____ and English literature. Her work continues to inspire people with its message of divine love and _____.

God	anchorite	English	well	Christ	emphasis	visions	phrase	optimism
punishment	Julian	history	book	attitudes	mysticism	20th century		