

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Early American Civilizations Art

The early American civilizations, long before the arrival of _____, had a rich and diverse culture. One of the most significant expressions of this culture was through art. The _____, Aztec, and Inca civilizations, among others, created a wide variety of artistic expressions that included pottery, _____, and monumental architecture. The Maya, known for their intricate calendar system, also excelled in creating detailed _____ that adorned their temples and palaces. The Aztecs, on the other hand, were known for their _____, which often depicted gods and were used in religious ceremonies. The Inca excelled in _____ production, creating garments with complex patterns that indicated the wearer's _____ and achievements. These civilizations also built impressive _____, such as the pyramids of the Maya and the Aztecs, and the Inca's Machu _____, which blended their architectural skills with their natural surroundings. Gold and _____ work was another area where these civilizations showed their artistry, crafting elaborate _____ and ceremonial items that displayed their skills in metalworking. Additionally, these cultures created vibrant _____ that depicted scenes from their daily life, beliefs, and myths. Art was not only an aesthetic _____ but also played a significant role in the social and religious life of these civilizations. It was used to convey _____, celebrate the divine, and showcase the power and prestige of their leaders. Through their art, the early American _____ communicated their understanding of the world, their values, and their aspirations. Despite the _____ of Europeans in the 16th century, which led to significant changes in the Americas, the influence of these early artistic _____ can still be seen today. They continue to inspire modern artists and remain a testament to the creativity and resilience of the Americas' first _____.

- status
- jewelry
- traditions
- silver
- expression
- civilizations
- Maya
- Europeans
- murals
- structures
- Picchu
- inhabitants
- arrival
- sculptures
- textiles
- stories
- frescoes
- textile