

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Exploring the World through Maps

In the Age of Exploration, maps were more than just tools for _____. They were windows to new worlds, capturing the imagination of _____, artists, and the public alike. These maps did not only show the way but also told stories of the unknown, filled with _____ creatures and speculative geographies. Cartographers played a vital role, combining scientific _____ and artistic skill to create these detailed works of art. As _____ ventured into uncharted waters, the information they brought back was eagerly added to the latest maps, making each one a living _____ of human curiosity and ambition. The influence of maps extended beyond the practical; they shaped the European _____ of the world and themselves. Through maps, _____ were claimed, even before they were fully understood or explored. The _____ and accuracy of maps improved over time, thanks to advancements in _____ techniques and a better understanding of the globe. This era of mapmaking not only charted a course for future _____ but also left a lasting legacy in the realm of art, with beautifully crafted _____ that are still admired today. Maps from the Age of Exploration serve as a _____ of how our view of the world has evolved and how, at one time, the _____ beckoned with both danger and promise.

- maps
- territories
- navigation
- knowledge
- perception
- reminder
- unknown
- measurement
- document
- ships
- explorations
- explorers
- detail
- mythical