

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Impact of Hudson's Bay Company in Canada

In the early 17th century, the _____ Bay Company was founded, becoming one of the oldest companies in the world. Its main goal was to trade furs with the _____ peoples of North America, which played a significant role in the economic development of Canada. The company established several trading _____ across the vast territories around Hudson Bay. These posts became centers of trade for fur, which was highly valued in Europe for fashion and warmth. The _____ fur was especially sought after, leading to intense trading activities. The company was granted a _____ by King Charles II, which gave it control over the land draining into Hudson Bay, known as Rupert's Land. This immense _____ was crucial for the company's fur trading operations. Over time, the Hudson's Bay Company expanded its activities to include exploration. _____ working for the company mapped vast areas of Canada, contributing to the geographical knowledge of the _____. They established relationships with various Indigenous groups, which were essential for the _____ of the fur trade. However, these relationships also led to significant changes in the lifestyles and _____ of these Indigenous communities. In the 19th century, the company's role evolved as it entered the retail _____, opening stores across Canada. Today, the Hudson's Bay Company is known more for its _____ stores than its historical fur trading, but its impact on the development of _____ is undeniable. Its early activities laid the foundations for modern Canadian _____, economy, and even its geographical boundaries.

- business
- cultures
- Indigenous
- Hudson's
- success
- retail
- society
- charter
- area
- continent
- beaver
- Canada
- posts
- Explorers