

name: class: date:

Journals in early American literature

In the early days of American _____, explorers and settlers wrote journals to document their experiences. These writings provide a _____ into the challenges and discoveries of life in a new land. Often, they would describe the vast, _____ landscapes they encountered, full of dense forests and wide rivers. The journals were filled with accounts of meetings with _____ American tribes, some of which were friendly, while others were wary of the newcomers. Through these pages, we learn about the settlers' daily lives, including their struggles to find food and build shelter in the _____ environment. The writers also recorded their _____, capturing the fear, excitement, and hope they felt on their journey. One common theme is the sense of _____, as many left their homes in search of a better life or to claim new lands for their country. These journals also reflect the _____ between settlers and indigenous peoples, a dark side of American expansion. Despite the dangers, the promise of _____ and prosperity drove many to endure the hardships. Their stories, preserved in these _____, offer invaluable insights into the era's social, cultural, and political landscape. Through their eyes, we can understand the complexities of early American _____ and the indomitable spirit of those who shaped it.

adventure

diaries

emotions

freedom

Native

untouched

history

society

conflict

harsh

window