

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Land Pollution and Its Impacts

Land pollution is a significant environmental issue that affects the _____ of our planet. It occurs when harmful substances, such as _____ and waste, contaminate the soil. This type of pollution can come from various _____, including industrial activities, agricultural practices, and improper waste _____. One of the main causes of land pollution is the excessive use of _____ and fertilizers in farming. These substances can seep into the ground and pollute the _____, making it less fertile and even toxic. Another source is the dumping of non-biodegradable _____, like plastic and electronic waste, which can take hundreds of years to _____. This not only affects the soil's quality but also harms _____ that come into contact with these pollutants. Contaminated land can also lead to water _____, as harmful chemicals can leach into groundwater or run off into nearby _____ and lakes. The consequences of land pollution are far-reaching, impacting not just the environment but also human _____. Eating crops grown in polluted soil can lead to various health issues, including _____. To combat land pollution, it's essential to promote recycling and waste _____, adopt sustainable farming practices, and enforce stricter regulations on industrial _____. By taking these steps, we can protect our environment and ensure a healthier _____ for the next generations.

- | | | | | | | | |
|------------|-----------|----------|-----------|--------|---------|-----------|-----------|
| discharge | health | disposal | reduction | health | sources | materials | cancer |
| pesticides | chemicals | wildlife | future | soil | rivers | decompose | pollution |