

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Mysteries of Sutton Hoo

In the early _____, a significant discovery was made in _____, England, at a place called Sutton Hoo. It was the burial site of an _____ king, believed to be King Raedwald of East Anglia. The _____ buried under a large mound was not just a means of transport but a vessel to the afterlife, filled with _____ and artifacts of remarkable craftsmanship. Among the items found were a _____, finely crafted with animal motifs, and a sword that indicated the high _____ of the deceased. The site contained not only weapons but also items of daily life, such as _____ and spoons, suggesting a connection between the material and the spiritual world. The _____ and garnet cloisonné work showcased the exquisite Anglo-Saxon artistry, highlighting their skills in _____ and design. Sutton Hoo transformed our understanding of the _____, showing that this period was not devoid of culture and sophistication. The discovery underscored the importance of _____ rituals in Anglo-Saxon society, revealing insights into their beliefs about life after _____. It also provided a glimpse into the political structure of the time, suggesting a well-organized society with strong _____. The Sutton Hoo find continues to be a cornerstone for historians and archaeologists, unraveling the complex tapestry of early _____ history.

treasures   Anglo-Saxon   bowls   leaders   Suffolk   status   death century   burial   Dark Ages   helmet   gold   ship   metallurgy   English