

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Nobility's Influence in Scottish Independence

During the Scottish wars of _____, a group of noble families played a crucial role in shaping the _____ future. These families, known as the nobility, were not just wealthy landowners; they were also fierce _____ who led their armies into battle. One of the most famous figures was _____ the Bruce, who was crowned King of Scots and led Scotland to victory at the Battle of _____ in 1314. This victory was a turning point, significantly weakening English claims over Scotland. The _____ were another important aspect of Scottish nobility. Each clan was like a large family, with its own _____, traditions, and loyalty to the clan chief. These clans often banded together to support the cause of _____, although there were also times when internal disputes divided them. The nobility also had a significant influence on the _____ of the time. Marriages between noble families were common, used to secure _____ that could provide military and financial support for the independence _____. Such alliances were crucial in gaining international recognition and aid, especially from _____, Scotland's ally against England. However, the nobility's _____ was not without controversy. Allegiances could shift, and some nobles were accused of _____ for switching sides to support the English king, often for promises of land and _____. Despite these challenges, the Scottish nobility's dedication to their _____ and its independence remained a powerful force throughout the wars. The wars of independence eventually led to the recognition of Scotland's sovereignty, with the _____ of Edinburgh–Northampton in 1328 acknowledging Robert the Bruce as the legitimate king. This _____ showcased the complex role of the nobility in medieval Scottish society, balancing their own _____ with the collective struggle for freedom.

- France
- independence
- titles
- period
- country's
- alliances
- Bannockburn
- country
- Robert
- movement
- warriors
- betrayal
- independence
- clans
- land
- interests
- role
- Treaty
- diplomacy