

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Rococo Court Life

In the 18th century, _____ style became popular among European _____. Known for its ornate and decorative features, Rococo influenced not only _____ but also the lifestyle at court. The _____ were adorned with intricate designs, showcasing the wealth and status of their owners. One famous example is the _____ palace in France, which was a center of political power and social life.

At these palaces, the _____ engaged in various activities. They spent hours on their _____, wearing elaborate outfits and wigs. Women's dresses were particularly extravagant, with wide _____ and intricate lace. Men favored _____ adorned with gold and silver threads. This emphasis on appearance was a way to display their social _____.

Daily life at court involved attending _____ and banquets. These events were opportunities for nobles to socialize and form alliances. The music and dance at these gatherings were heavily influenced by Rococo _____, featuring light, playful melodies. The _____ served was equally lavish, with multiple courses designed to impress guests.

Aside from entertainment, court life also involved _____. Nobles used these gatherings to discuss political matters and influence _____. This blend of leisure and politics was a hallmark of Rococo court life.

However, this lifestyle was not sustainable. The excessive _____ and focus on luxury led to financial strains. It also created a disconnect between the _____ and the common people, eventually contributing to social upheavals like the _____ Revolution. The Rococo era, therefore, was a time of great beauty but also of underlying _____ that would shape European history.

decisions	hoopskirts	status	Versailles	French	tensions	spending
nobility	politics	aesthetics	balls	appearance	nobles	art	coats	palaces
food	Rococo	aristocracy						