

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Satire in Enlightenment Literature

In the _____ era, literature played a crucial role in shaping society's thoughts. Authors used _____ to critique and question traditional beliefs. This style of writing often involved humor and irony to expose the _____ in society and politics. One famous writer, _____, used satire in his works to challenge the status quo. His novel "Candide" is a prime example, where he humorously critiques _____. Another significant figure was _____, known for his satirical masterpiece "Gaius's Travels". He used satire to criticize human _____ and societal norms. Satire in this period wasn't just about humor; it was a tool for _____ rebellion. Writers like _____ and _____ also contributed to this movement. They used their wit to expose the _____ in their societies. "The Rape of the Lock" by Pope is an excellent example, mocking the _____ of the aristocracy. Defoe, on the other hand, used irony in "Robinson Crusoe" to comment on _____ and individualism. These literary works were important because they made people _____ and question. They didn't just accept things as they were but looked for deeper _____ and truth. This form of writing was revolutionary at that time and contributed significantly to the intellectual and _____ development of the period. The impact of satire during the Enlightenment continues to influence modern literature, reminding us of the power of _____ to provoke thought and inspire change.

intellectual

satire

nature

words

flaws

meaning

optimism

hypocrisy

think

Enlightenment

cultural

Swift

colonialism

Defoe

pettiness

Pope

Voltaire