

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

Scottish Castles in the Middle Ages

In the _____, Scotland was known for its magnificent castles. These structures were not just _____ for the nobility, but also centers of _____. Each castle was unique, often built on high ground for better _____. The most common feature was the _____, a strong tower that served as the last line of defense. Surrounding the keep, there were often _____ and _____ for additional protection. The _____ was a crucial part of the castle, controlling access and providing security. Inside the castle, the _____ was the heart of daily life, where feasts and meetings took place. The _____ was always busy, preparing meals for the residents and guests. Castles also had _____, reflecting the importance of religion in medieval life. The _____ was a bustling area, with people working and training. Scottish castles were often involved in _____, playing key roles in the country's history. Their architecture evolved over time, reflecting changes in _____ technology and style.

battles

great hall

chapels

military

homes

gatehouse

towers

courtyard

walls

keep

Middle Ages

kitchen

power

defense