

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

The Digital Revolution

The Digital Revolution refers to the shift from _____ and analog electronic technology to digital electronics. It began in the late 1940s with the development of the first _____. These early computers were large and expensive, used mainly by governments and large _____. The invention of the _____ in 1947 was a pivotal moment. This led to smaller, more powerful computers. By the _____, computers became smaller and affordable, leading to the personal _____ revolution. Another significant milestone was the development of the _____, initially a project of the United States Defense Department. It quickly evolved into a global network connecting millions of people. The introduction of the _____ in the early 2000s further transformed our daily lives, allowing constant _____ to information and communication. Social media platforms like _____ and Twitter emerged, changing how we interact and share information. The Digital Revolution also impacted _____, with vast resources now available online. This era of rapid technological change continues to influence every aspect of modern _____.

Facebook	society	corporations	access	computer	education transistor	1970s	mechanical	smartphone	computers	Internet