

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

The Gold Rush in Australia

The Gold Rush in Australia began in the early 1850s. Thousands of people from around the _____ traveled to Australia to find gold. This influx of people changed the country dramatically. Many of these new _____ were called diggers. They set up camps and small towns near the goldfields. These areas quickly grew as more _____ came.

The goldfields were often tough places to live. Conditions were harsh and many _____ lived in tents. Despite the hardships, the dream of finding gold kept them going. The Gold Rush led to significant economic _____. New businesses started to cater to the needs of the miners. This period also saw the development of _____ like roads and railways.

The Gold Rush had a major impact on Australian _____. The population increased rapidly, and the cultural landscape became more diverse. People from Europe, _____, and America contributed to this new diversity. The rush for gold also led to conflicts, particularly with indigenous _____. Their lands were often invaded and disrupted by the miners.

Despite the challenges, the _____ played a crucial role in the colonization of Australia. It accelerated the development of _____ and towns. Melbourne and Sydney grew significantly during this period. The _____ generated from gold helped build schools, hospitals, and other public _____.

In conclusion, the Gold Rush was a pivotal event in Australian history. It transformed the _____, boosted the population, and left a lasting legacy on the country's development.

Gold Rush society infrastructure diggers China wealth arrivals world services growth economy people cities Australians