

name: _____

class: _____

date: _____

The Influence of Economy on Geography

In human geography, the _____ plays a crucial role in shaping the landscapes of the world. It determines where people _____, work, and how societies are organized. Cities often grow around _____ centers, ports, or areas rich in natural resources. The availability of _____ in these areas attracts people, leading to urbanization.

Agricultural practices are influenced by the _____ and geography of a region, but also by the market demands and _____ advancements. Tourism, another economic activity, can transform a _____ economy and physical appearance, attracting infrastructure development like hotels and entertainment _____.

Trade routes, both historic and modern, have been established based on geographical advantages, such as rivers, oceans, and _____ passes, facilitating the exchange of goods and cultural _____. Economic policies and globalization have further interconnected the _____, allowing regions to specialize in certain industries based on their geographical _____.

_____ . However, this economic development can also lead to environmental _____, such as pollution and deforestation, affecting the geography of a _____. Understanding the relationship between the economy and human geography helps us appreciate the complexity of our world and the need for sustainable _____.

mountain live technological industrial facilities region's economy development climate strengths ideas place world jobs challenges