

name: class: date:

Victorian Landscape Art

In the Victorian era, landscape painting became an important _____ in the art world. Artists were fascinated by the _____ of nature and sought to capture its essence on canvas. The _____ was a popular subject, reflecting the Victorian interest in the natural world and its contrasts with industrial _____. Painters like Turner and Constable revolutionized this form, emphasizing the emotional and atmospheric _____ of light and color. Their works depicted not just the physical _____ of the landscape but also its mood and _____. This period saw a shift from the detailed, idealized views of earlier periods to a more _____ approach. The public began to appreciate these paintings, seeing them as escapes from the rapidly changing society. Exhibitions and _____ started to feature landscape paintings prominently, making them accessible to a wider _____. Artists also started to explore the effects of the _____ and weather on the landscape, adding a dynamic element to their _____. Through their paintings, they conveyed messages about the _____ and the importance of preserving natural beauty. The Victorian era thus marked a significant _____ in the evolution of landscape painting, establishing it as a medium for both _____ expression and social commentary.

countryside

expressive

artistic

seasons

genre

audience

environment

works

urbanization

galleries

effects

point

beauty

atmosphere

appearance